

Anybody that actually "wants" to be called by telemarketers in NJ can allow it now at reasonable times of the day. The current law in New Jersey is wonderful; it should be the standard for the country. Time is something none of us get back, time spent well will make America more productive - time listening to a pitch when you don't want to hear a pitch is not productive for those who seek to control their own time in their home. Only someone who "doesn't care" about what the majority wants and expects of our legal system and the FCC would weaken this wonderful NJ milestone that has afforded valuable uninterrupted time at home to many of New Jersey's people. Marketers will find a way to get to their audience; it is not the job of the FCC to make it easy for telemarketers to be a hindrance to Americans. I very strongly object to any FCC waste of resources to undermine a state's success story and would be angered if New Jersey's laws were made weaker. Spend FCC resources on the scores of problems facing consumers on the Internet with spam and malicious content from around the world and stop seeking to harm the masses who finally got what they wanted - the state of New Jersey has already taken out the telemarketers on the phone at home, we in NJ don't need the FCC putting their nose in where they do not help the NJ public at large nor strengthen our ability to "take out the trash" in communications! Get to work on things that are worthy - make America stronger, not weaker or more vulnerable to wasting of time and energy to take telemarketing calls from around the globe. TIME IS MONEY! Privacy is an American Right that is eroded enough already. Defend our great achievements and please take note and follow the New Jersey lawmakers lead at the FCC.
